AN OLD MAN'S STORY.

Ernest Moore, scholar, philosopher, Christian, was out of harmony with himself. He was 26 years old and preparing to be a minister of the gospel. The worst of it was that he had not a friend to whom he could unbosom himself. His dignity would not permit it. Without a mother or sister and perplexed about the woman whom he had imagined he should like to make a closer friend-what could be do? There had been a misunderstanding between them. In his heart warred passion, resentment, tenderness and self respect. He looked in his mirror, and as he saw his troubled face he soliloquized, "With all the philosophies and philanthropies of the world I am oblivious to them and confounded by one little woman! Life is a labyrinth."

He remembered an acquaintance, an old man, a minister like himself, but at the other end of the career-superannuated.

A man who knew him said of Emerson that "he was the fleest gentleman in the world, not because his manner had the finish of the drawing room-though it had a polish of its own—but because of the exquisite hospitality of the man. He always eccived you as if he had been waiting all

Something like that was the manner of Rev. Mr. Strong. He was 80 years old, and le would assure you, with a serger smile, that "every third thought was of

But two-thirds of his thoughts were wise precepts, resulting from his wide ex-perience. His life had been well spent, be well spared. Greeting his young visitor, he exerted all his charm of welcome and artfully led Mr. Moore to express himself. In a few minutes the young man be trayed his mental uneasiness, but his companion did not press for an exact confession. He knew how often a man grows confidential to regret it afterward. the wise old man wished to offer help. He mused, "What at his age is most likely to trouble him?" and after brief reflection he said to himself, "Woman." His face took on a self derisive smile as he said aloud:

"Forgive an old man's egetism. I have been looking over my journal of 50 years ago, and now you will smile with incr ulity when I tell you that the record is of You have kept a journal for half a cen-interested in myself."

Little touches of frankness like that made this old man very lovable "I had almost forgotten this episode, and perhaps if I had told the story from memory I might have made out a better case for myself. As some French wit ex-claims, 'Where is the man who can bear to have his version of an old love affair compared with the love letters which he rote during the experience?' But here I witness against myself. "What roused your interest in this affair "Ah! What do you think? It was this: I went up to D—— last week to see my grandson graduate. The exercises of commencement week were all entertaining, so I remained several days. One night as I left the hall after a concert a very pretty young woman stopped me, and after pronouncing my name and making some perlite remark she said, 'I am the daughter of Wilhelmina Day.' I was so surprised that my wits somewhat deserted me. I managed to utter, 'Are you here with your mother?' She said, 'No; with my aunt. At that the crowd pushed us asunder, and I, in a daze, walked away, trying in vain to see her again. Now, Wilhelmina Day was once my sweetheart." "Yes, and from the confessional in this old journal she caused me many a vexatious perplexity. We had been acquainted for a year or more when we were thrown in one another's society quite intimately vince us both that we were made for each other. I proposed marriage. She accepted.

Well, sir, we were engaged.

kling eyes, and the young man showed keen curiosity, as he asked:
"Was it satisfactory, sir?" "Let me read an extract from my jour-nal. My only apology for this folly is Thackeray's saying, 'If you are never a fool, you will never be a wise man.' Lis-

The old man relapsed into a reverle, rather amusing, judging from his twin-

"'I trust that Wilhelmina is the gift from God for which I have prayed. She is handsome and sensible, that I may love her; she is tall and healthy, to endure the fatigue of an itinerant life; she is cheerful, to buoy me up in disappointment; she is much younger than I, so that she may be in vigor to minister to my wants when I am old; she has a cultivated mind and can be my intellectual companion.' There! Did you over hear such concentrated egotism? Too calculating, too analytical for real love, wasn't it? Perhaps all the advantages were on my side. Wilhelming soon showed signs of dissatisfaction. Alas, when she was fault finding, I grew haughty. She showed pride; I retaliated. In short, we were soon quarreling like a pair of unmannerly worldlings. I became utterly wretched, not because she jilted me—which she did at last—but because I sacrificed my self respect. There is no pain like a loss of self respect. Peace of mind depends on one's own conduct and not upon the treatment one receives from others. I then resolved that in all my affairs of love and friendship, let others act as they might, I would behave like a Christian gentleman. That was the charm which guided me through life's labyrinth. A few years after Wilhelmina's reign # was happly married, but before that joyous consummation I suffered much in body and mind.

"Can you forgive the garrulity of an old man?" asked Mr. Strong as he clasped his guest's hand in farewell.

"Forgive you? I thank you! You have cheered me!" he answered, and as he walked homeward he mused: "That is a good charm to guide one in the labyrinth of life. No matter what others may do, see that one's own conduct is that of a Christian gentleman.

As the old man, after he was left alone, sat gazing into the fire, his eyes still wo the lingerings of a merry twinkle and ble lips curved with a colm smile. He was more than 80 years old, and he saw his way clearly out of the labyrinth.—Kate Kaufman in Cincinnati Post.

The Beal Advantage.

"So you're running a trolley car," exclaimed the unlucky man's friend. "Yes, I was persuaded to take the job." "But you surely can't regard the salary as much of an object?"
"No. The salary wasn't much of an inducement. You see, it was pointed out to me that if I was on board the car running it I couldn't be the fellow who gets rem ever."-Washington Star.
